WSDOT to Reinforce Fairweather Creek Culvert

During the 2011-2015 reconstruction of State Route 520's Eastside segment, WSDOT crews built eight large culverts to improve passage for fish. While the culverts perform well most of the year, biologists found that four of them require reinforcement of their stream banks to ensure sufficient water flow for fish during the region's drier months. One of these culverts is the Fairweather Creek Culvert, located southeast of Fairweather Bay, under SR 520, near the east end of Northeast 28th Street (identified as 1 in photo below). Beginning in late August, a WSDOT contractor will embed large cobble and boulders near the culverts' outer walls to create a more consistent stream channel and ensure adequate flows for fish during low-water periods. This work will occur during the day. Some vehicle and equipment noise may occur in the vicinity of the project.
